- In February 1951, representatives of the Chinese Communist Ministry of Railways made a survey of the work done by the wireless communications sections* of the relivay bureaus in China exclusive of the Northeast. In order, the sections considered the best were those of the Tientsin, Shanghai, Tsinan, and Hengyang Railway Bureaus.
- 2. In mid-February the East China Postal and Telecommunications Administration completed laying the telephone line between Shaowu (117-28, 27-21), Fukien, and Chuchi (120-13, 29-44), Chekiang. This line is being used mainly by the troops in this area.
- The laying of a telephone line between Wenchow and Chingtien (120-17, 28-09). Chekiang, was scheduled to be completed before 25 November 1950.
- In October 1950 the laying of a telephone line from Chingtien to Chingum (120-03, 28-39) via Lishui (119-54, 23-28) was temporarily halted pending completion of the land reform.
- In late February plans were being made to lay a telephone line from Heing-heingchia (95-09, 41-48), Kansu, to Hoerhkuossu (80-22, 44-12), Sinkiang, via Tihua. Two tons of copper ordered by the Northwest China Postal and Tele-communications Administration at Lanchow were scheduled to arrive in Lanchow from the SSR in late May or early June 1951.
- On 1 February telegraph lines between Ili (80-51, 44-03) and Alma Ata (approximately 77-01, 45-10) and between Tacheng (82-57, 46-45) and Bakhty (approximately 82-50, 46-47), Kazakh SSR, began operation.
 - Field Commont. Other details of the expansion of telegraph and telephone services in China in late 1950 and early 1951 were reported in SO-59795.
 - Washington Comment. S0-57940, from a similar source, reported that this velegraph service was in operation in January 1951.
